WOPS SHOW SUPERIOR FORM IN SHOOTING TO WIN 27 TO 18

The Wahpeton Wildcats defeated the Peds in the game at Wahpeton last Saturday by a score of 27 to 18.

The Peds played listless ball, none of the men playing up to form. Moorhead's floor work was as good as Wahpeton's but their poor shooting caused their downfall, many shots being missed close to the basket.

At the end of the first half the score was 7 to 7. In the last half the Wildcats took betetr advantage of their shots and caged a larger per cent of them than the Peds.

W. A. L. PRESENTS ICE CARNIVAL

PRIZES AWARDED FOR VARIOUS EVENTS

One of the greatest events of the year has at last almost arrived. What could be better than an All College Ice Carnival? It is to be given Friday at 3:30 by the Women's Athletic League of M. S. T. C.

As all contests have certain requirements, likewise this has its three. You who are candidates must accurately measure yourselves by three measuring sticks, and woe unto you if you are found lacking in any of these required respects. Only those who are endowed either by heredity or environment with these three qualities can enter this wonderful contest. These essentials are good spirit, vim, and pep.

Who can enter? Why! Everybody! We, however, expect each organization of the college to borrow, beg, or steal a large enough number of qualified members in order that they may put on a stunt. These stunts must be original and also must reveal to the overwhelming audience the cleverness of the organization as a whole. Besides having stunts given by each organization individuals are given the opportunity to contest with one another for great rewards in such events as the following:

- The man with the best costume.
- The woman with the best costume.
- The best fancy skater (man or woman).
- The winner of the women's race.
- The winner of the men's race.

In order that we may award the prizes to the most worthy participants we have chosen very capable judges. Miss Gibbon and Mr. Hess have been

ENGLISH CRITIC LECTURES HERE

POWYS FINDS MYSTERY,
BEAUTY, IN SHAKESPEARE

"To rescue Shakespeare from the professors and academic scholars and interpret him so that he would be of some use to the world," was the purpose of the lecture on Shakespeare given by John Cowper Powys, English author and lecturer, at a special assembly of the students of the Moorhead State Teachers College Monday afternoon.

There is a mystery, beauty, and universality in Shakespeare as there is in the sun, Mr. Powys said. He does not preach or moralize, but presents the good and bad, the ugly and beautiful as they are. It is foolish to try to discover whether Shakespeare or Francis Bacon wrote the plays, he declared. The plays are written, use them.

From different characters in Shakespeare's plays, however, one may secure a composite picture of Shakespeare, himself, Mr. Powys declared. Hamlet reflects the universality of Shakespeare understanding; Falstaff, his Rabelasian humor through which pathos creeps; Prince Hal, his English blood; Mercutio, his wisdom in "playing to both houses" and keeping himself free from the restrictions of any set viewpoint; and Prospero, the mature dramatist and poet in the last years of his life.

RESULTS OF Y. M. C. A.

MOVIE ARE GOOD

"Your Best Friend," which was shown at the auditorium last week, drew a large crowd, chiefly from the college and Junior High School. Tho the artistic touches of the picture were rather crude, and the acting could have been improved upon, and in spite of the condition of the machine, the crowd enjoyed the story. The picture showed a great moral truth,—that the best friend of any person is his mother.

CLASS DEBATES WOMAN-

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The words he has spoken, the deeds he has done have made Abraham Lincoln one of the most outstanding figures of the world's history. But possibly the most fascinating phase of this man's life is a study of his moods, his beliefs.

"Lincoln was naturally despondent and sad, like many another who made mirth for a merry company. Lincoln was made two distinct persons in one. He was a man of keen insight and absorbing meditation. His swift changes from elate joy to silent brooding over the problems of life were noticeable to all his friends. One moment a merry boy, exultant, sunny, cheery; the next, a care-burdened man, deep in thought. His characteristics were honor, fidelity, and truth." So Lincoln's moods and beliefs are described by Ida Tarbell in her biography of his life.

We are familiar with this strange figure of history; we know his habitual moods of despondency and sadness. But he was a man of keen insight; he "made mirth for a merry company." His life's story is filled with those afterwards, amusing incidents, from which he obtained most of the humor with which he "made mirth for a merry company." Those little anecdotes which always begun, "that reminds me," were ready bits of entertainment for him and the crowd that invariably gathered about him. Lincoln's wit always brought a laugh; it resulted in general good feeling. That spirit of geniality and good fellowship with which he was blessed made him a welcome visitor wherever he went.

Not only that, but his varied experiences gave him many points of contact with his townspeople. A farmer, a railsplitter, a soldier, a surveyor, a postmaster, a storekeeper, and later a man of politics—he became a keen student of human nature. He learned psychology first hand. He not only knew the doctrines of individual differences, but could make practical application of it. He could deal with such men as Douglas, Stanton, and Seward satisfactorily. At the same time he could write such letters as the one to the Boston widow who had lost five sons in the war; he could so far remove himself from his strictly executive duties as to pardon the country soldier who slept at his post.

He was a man whose nature appealed to every heart. His humble birth, his life of disappointments, his tragic death suggest another figure in the world's history. His love, which was universal in its nature, gave rise to that saying, "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and a lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

His life was an exemplification of that, and it is for that reason, probably more than any other, that we today remember the birthday of that man who was destined to become the savior of our nation.

TEAM LEAVES FOR MAYVILLE

Tonight the Peds journey to Mayville, where they will attempt to get revenge for the defeat Mayville handed them in the close game here early in the season. The Mayville gym is about the same speed as ours so the boys should feel at home.

Mmes. Frank Temple and F. D. Henderson, Fargo pianists, presented a musical program at chapel exercises at the College on Friday, February 5.

WONDER WHAT ABE

LINCOLN THINKS ABOUT?

Most of us notice the statue of Abraham Lincoln which stands on the first landing of the broad stairway in the main building of our College. A statue of a man, tall, gaunt, rugged and possessed of quiet, kindly features.

Have you ever paused before this statue and wondered what Abe Lincoln is thinking about? Imagine that statue to be possessed of powers of thought. As he stands there day after day he thinks about this day, a day of national respect and tribute to his name. His mind goes back to his early life in the log cabin of frontier days. He thinks of the hardships he endured; but he thinks more about the sufferings of his dear mother and remembers her last words to him, "Be a good boy, Abe." He remembers how he tried to be good and honest; how he strove hard for an education.

His mind suddenly changes to thoughts of his later career. He thinks of his struggle for the principles of home government. He thinks of the great Civil war and regrets that so much of a sacrifice in lives and money was needed to win liberty for all. After all he is thankful that this blot on our economic life was removed.

Like the really great Lincoln does not think of his own greatness. He wonders whether his life was as great a success as we believe it is. He had not three or four rules for success. He did his duty as he saw it and his people acknowledged his honesty and devotion to their cause. He sees the honor we pay him and thanks us for it.

He sees many of the principles he fought for now established. He thinks of the changes that have come about since his life blood ebbed. Out of all these changes he sees a definite goal of achievement in government, education and industry. There may be whirls, back currents and halts in life's river but gradual change and evolution bring it to its destination.

His mind is composed as he sees crisis after crisis followed by greater and better ways of doing things. He is appreciative of his residence in an institution, for which he would have given much to have attended as a young man. Honest Abe watches day by day the working of the great machine, human progress, and sees that all is well.
